ROOSEVELT'S KINDLY ACT

A thought full and kindly act of President Roosevelt has won him the heart of one small town in South Carolina. It was not much to do, perhaps, but he is a very busy man, and many men not so busy would not have thought of doing it. Moreover, when one such incident comes to light, it is an indication that there are a good many others of the same sort of which the public does not know.
It was expected that during the President's recent Southern trip he would pass through Stallville, S. C., and the town got all ready to give him the best reception in its power. It was not much of a town, but all there was of it was in holiday trim. The school children were to sing for the President, flowers were gathered to strew in his pathway, and the whole place wore a festive air. But the President changed his route.
There was, it is said, a bad spot in the road near Stallville, which made it necessary for the party to deflect its course and leave out that hamlet. Now, there is nothing much more depressing than to get all ready for a visitor and then be disappointed, and have to put away one's best clothes and eat up the cake intended for the state tea party.
Somehow, nobody appreciates that cake, unless it is the ever-hungry small boy of the family. The holiday flavor which it was to have had seems turned to dust and ashes.
Perhaps Mr. Roosevelt appreciated that fact. At any rate, this is what he did. He wrote with his own hand, on his own private stationery, a letter to the teacher of the district school, expressing his regret that he did not come to Stallville and he sent the school a fine photograph of himself.
That picture will be hung on the wall of the schoolhouse, and the letter will be treasured as a precious thing. It was an act all the more gracious because it was not asked for and nobody expected it.—Washington Times.

clude 360 battleships, 471 cruisers, 1255

HOSTETTER'S STOMACH BITTERS

is compounded with the greatest of care and contains nothing injurious.
It is a safe and reliable remedy for stomach complaints and has a record of fifty years of cure to its credit.
Many prominent physicians prescribe and recommend it as a cure for dyspepsia, indigestion, flatulency, belching, nervousness and insomnia. Try the genuine must have our Private Die Stamp over the neck of the bottle.

HOSTETTER'S STOMACH BITTERS

"Well," I said, as I sank into a chair and held up my muff to keep off the heat of the fire, "what was it like?" "Oh, very nice. You ought to have come," he said, standing with his back to the fire and thoughtfully filling his pipe.

"You know very well I couldn't," I retorted. "Tell me about it. How did the bride look?"
"As well as is possible in such an impossible get-up."

"What was the 'get-up' like?"
"Oh, white, of course," he said, proceeding to light his pipe; "and a great deal of it, all folds and fluff and gauzy stuff. It went out rather too much."

"How do you mean 'went out'?"
"Didn't go down straight enough (puff). It took up too much room.
There was too much of it. She was smothered in it; you could hardly see her face. But it was the usual thing.
You've seen it yourself scores of times."

"Did she look nervous?"
"Not a bit!" (chuckling a match into the fire and putting his hands into his pockets). "She looked as if she enjoyed it. He looked a bit blue, poor fellow!" (Hopeless collapse!)

"Well, what about the bridesmaids? How many were there?"
"About a dozen, beginning tall and ending up small."

"And what did they wear?"
"Well, they had rather pretty dresses, and I took a good look at them as they were walking up. What do you call that stuff like a conceiting?"

"Accorded-pleated," I suggested.
"The stuff I mean, not the way it's done."

"Oh, chiffon?" "No, not chiffon."
"Poult de sole?" "No." "Mousseline de laine?" He shook his head.
"Panne?" I suggested with a twitching lip.

"How much?" he asked, looking at me with a shade of suspicion, to be immediately reassured by my fame of serious interest.

"Panne," I repeated, and spelled it; "Pannee." "Never heard of it. No; it was quite of those. It's a stuff I know quite well, only I can't remember the name.
Sometimes it's black, and you have teagowns made of it."

"Oh, crepe de chine?"
"Yes; that's it. Crepe de chine. Well, they were made of rather pale yellow crepe de chine, with lots of lace and fluff all about." (He made a vague gesture, implying that they were swathed in it.) "And up at the top there was a band of silk or satin stuff about as broad as that." (He measured a few inches on his pipe.) "And then up above that there was a sort of neck—only it didn't go up quite as far as the neck—made of lace; at least, not exactly lace, but that stuff with holes in it. It didn't go quite high enough, though."

"That was a pity," I murmured.
"What was wrong with it?"
"Well, it ended off rather abruptly just before it got to the neck, and made them look rather bare. It wasn't becoming; didn't suit their complexions. Then they had white hats all punched in at the top and sides," he punched an imaginary hat with the bowl of his pipe, "with yellow roses underneath."

"There was a pause. And then, 'The sleeves were the best,' he went on.
'What were they like?' I asked.
'Well, they were made of the lace-stuff—the stuff with holes, and they had tucks.'"

"Where?" I asked.
"All round here," he said, trimming his own coat-sleeve with imaginary tucks. "They went down as far as this" (he indicated his elbow). "And then they went out again like a balloon. And then when they got down here" (indicating his wrist) "they went in again, and there was chiffon flaming over their hands."

He looked round suddenly. "What are you laughing at?" he asked, suspiciously.

"I'm not laughing," I fibbed. "I am only thinking what a pity it is you have missed your vocation. You might have made a fortune as a fashion writer for one of the ladies' papers."

But not another word could I get out of him about the dresses.—M. H.
B. in Philadelphia Telegraph.
